Competitive strategy, top-level governance, corporate culture, ethical decision-making, choices among commercial opportunities – an insightful, principles-based approach to corporate issues:

… achieving sustained success at board level …
… recognising when change is needed and taking action …
… monitoring the effects of change …
… skills and relationships in the service of strategy …
… corporate culture - realignment and renewal …
… ethics - corporate best practice …

As well as significant experience at director level with commercial and non-profit organisations, Karen Martyn has lectured for nine years for the Institute of Directors (New Zealand), and conducted research and development and carried out governance training for the Commonwealth Association for Corporate Governance.

Dr Martyn teaches conflict resolution techniques and problem-solving skills, necessary for sustainable board and management success. She fosters active co-operation in pursuit of goals, building trust between directors and between the board and management.

Karen's insightful and motivating approach combined with her governance and human resources expertise provide a unique and valuable combination for advising and supporting successful board and management processes.

Dr Martyn is a professional in the fields of corporate governance and human resources, fully conversant with legislative, regulatory and fiduciary responsibilities as well as ethical and moral obligations. She enables a positive climate that fosters development while building skills and relationships.
